CALVIN KLEIN

► Italo Zucchelli's collections for Calvin Klein are usually a fun-filled first-class ticket to Funky Town, all experiments with cut and cloth and Lord knows what else. And while his latest lineup offers plenty in the way of unexpected materials and proportions, it also features more-traditional tailored pieces like this microtweed suit. Even the mayor of Funky Town has to dress up every now and again.

Two-button wool suit ($1,195), cotton sweater ($475), and cotton shirt ($195) by Calvin Klein Collection; monk-strap shoes ($725) by O'Keefe.

ERMEGILDO ZEGNA

► Checks and plaids, tweeds and cords: There ain't nothin' flat or shiny about the fall offerings from this power-suit powerhouse. This three-piece wool-and-cashmere suit, to name just one example, can dress up with a shirt and tie and dress down with a cashmere turtle-neck. Maximum versatility for a man on the move.

Two-button three-piece wool-and-cashmere suit ($3,195), wool-and-cashmere turtle-neck sweater ($895), and cotton shirt ($395) by Ermenegildo Zegna.

THE BURBERRY DISPATCH RIDER'S TRENCH COAT

Thomas Burberry is somewhat godlike to anyone interested in performance clothing, i.e., stuff designed to function well in trying circumstances. His first experiment—the invention of gabardine, a tightly woven wool that shrugged off the rain—paved the way for lighter and more wearable solutions to wind and rain like the trench coat, and it also served as the foundation for his retail empire. That Thomas Burberry's empire is still thriving is due in no small way to the talents of creative director Christopher Bailey and his penchant for dipping deep into the company archives and bringing old ideas up to date. In a fall collection that is stuffed to the brim with authentic riffs on British military uniforms, this proofed trench-coat style has details straight off the battlefield, designed with either four legs or two wheels in mind, from the straps that allow the coat to be tied to the legs while in the saddle to the leather reinforcements and diagonal chest pocket reminiscent of those worn by wartime dispatch riders.

Cotton-canvas coat ($1,695) by Burberry; burberry.com. Wool trousers ($375) by John Varvatos; johnvarvatos.com. Leather boots ($1,280) by Bottega Veneta; bottegaveneta.com.

THE STONE ISLAND COAT

For Stone Island to create a special line—the Shadow project—just to focus on even more functionality and performance is like Peter Luger opening a new room just for really, really big steaks. Shadow is a collaboration between Stone Island and the performance-obsessed label Acronym. Stone Island, an Italian brand, from its beginnings in 1981 put in the forefront casual clothing with a very big emphasis on technical performance and cloth innovation. This example, vintage 2010, is outwardly a clean-lined trench coat in a chemically proofed polyester-nylon blend with a sueded surface. But by way of a double-layered front, the wearer has access to a multiplicity of different-shaped pockets. Form and function in one very attractive package—to say nothing of the utter timelessness of very good design—is something that will not date.

Polyester-and-nylon coat ($1,138) by Stone Island; stoneisland.com. Wool-and-cashmere cable-knit sweater ($295) by Lincx DC & Co.; lincsdavidchu.com. Cotton jeans ($715) by Louis Vuitton; louisvuitton.com. Leather boots ($650) by Dunhill; dunhill.com.
